Need a computer to achieve an important goal?

Choosing the right computer can be hard – finding one that includes real technical support is almost impossible. Add a change in employment, a tight budget - and your computer decision becomes extremely difficult. This program was designed to help people overcome these challenges.

Sound familiar? Here is some valuable advice...

A “Big Box” stores’ purpose is to generate profit. They pay the lowest price they can for computers, service, and support and charge us as much as we are willing to pay. The customers this appeals to are marginally tech-savvy folks with disposable incomes who will buy a new computer every year or two because they value ‘new shiny stuff’ over cost, quality, and support. Although personal computer prices dropped from $1800 in 1991 to today’s average $600, so have the ‘lifespan’ of these computers – 8 years to 30 months respectively. Support and quality have also been reduced to little if anything without breaking out a credit card and interpreting thick accents.

Those of us who need a computer for an important goal and do not have disposable income cannot afford to play this game. To us – the cost of ownership (total cost of owning a computer over its lifespan), its reliability and access to real technical support – is much more valuable than ‘new shiny stuff.’ This is why some friends and I started PCs for MAINE at my kitchen table in Stockton Springs more than 13 years ago...

This program builds thousands of computers every year for people from Kittery to Fort Kent. These fast, high-quality computers and outstanding user support are made available for the lowest cost possible. Specifically for individuals with limited resources who need a computer to achieve an important personal objective such as students, small business start-ups, job skills building or to overcome a disability.

Participation fees for this program are small thanks to Maine businesses who donate lots of high-end business class computers and our dedicated team of professionals and volunteers who do all the heavy lifting. We do this because Maine is a great place to live – and we believe that access to good technology can help make it a great place to work.

Good luck in your exciting new endeavor!
